

2014

WFSN Inaugural Forum

Forum Objectives

Colleges will:

- Understand the key ingredients to a successful WFSN strategy within their college, including committed leadership, bundling of services, dedicated infrastructure, commitment to institutional culture change, and comprehensive use of data.
- Have baseline understanding of each of the three core service areas (Education and Employment, Work and Income, and Financial Services and Asset Building Supports), how low and high touch services can be implemented, and will recognize how WFSN can be used to better serve low-income populations on their campus more holistically.
- Identify how their institution's existing WFSN-related work fits into the strategy, where they can expand existing services, and where students would be best served by new services.
- Understand the challenges and best practices of colleges who have experience implementing the strategy.
- Further formulate their plan for implementation through knowledge generated at forum sessions as well as planning and productive discussions during team time and use of a logic model.

State partner organizations will:

- Understand each of the three core service areas (Education and Employment, Work and Income, and Financial Services and Asset Building Supports).
- Begin to support the development of a learning community in their state.
- Understand likely challenges colleges will face in the initiative.

Consortia will:

- Begin to develop an intra and cross state learning community through interactions, both formal and informal, with other forum participants.
- Discuss reactions, ideas, and potential challenges, allowing for cross college communications and troubleshooting.

Core Elements of WFSN

The WFSN strategy comprises a variety of critical components necessary for its successful implementation and sustainability. Panelists will provide an in-depth look at how these critical components (e.g., bundling, high- and low-touch services, oversight and management, etc.) have been instrumental in advancing WFSN-related efforts on their respective campuses.

Moderator: Jenna Bryant, MDC

Panelists: Kristi Tucker, Instructor of College Studies, Pulaski Technical College; Marvin DeJear, Director—Evelyn K. Davis Center, Des Moines Area Community College; Sonya Caesar, Coordinator—Developmental Education, Community College of Baltimore County

11:00 – 12:00 p.m.

WFSN and Institutional Culture Change

At its core, WFSN is about changing how colleges support students towards completion and life success. Changing a college's culture requires vision, leadership, and planning. This session will begin to explore how colleges can change their cultures to incorporate the WFSN strategy.

Moderator: Sarah Griffen, WFSN Consultant

Presenter: Joi Blake, Vice President of Student Services, Skyline College

Building New Capacities Via Community Based Partnerships

Some of the new capacities called for by the WFSN project may be built or strengthened by teaming in new ways with local Community Based Organizations (CBOs) who excel at delivering exactly the kinds of support services that colleges may need to bolster. This interactive conversation will spotlight lessons from The Aspen Institute's Courses to Employment demonstration project that studied 6 such partnerships between CBO job training programs and community colleges, along with the speaker's direct experience in managing both sides of such partnerships.

Presenter: Bill Browning, Senior Program Manager, Aspen Institute Workforce Strategies Initiative

1:30 – 2:30 p.m.

Core WFSN Strand Session 1*:

Education and Employment Services

Education and Employment services comprise a strategic integration of academic coursework with career counseling, job readiness training, job placement, and career advancement services. This session will provide a deep dive into this main pillar of the WFSN strategy.

Presenters: Marvin DeJear, Director—Evelyn K. Davis Center, Des Moines Area Community College

Data Session

The design and implementation of a data collection process can be challenging for colleges, but it is also a critical element used to understand the impact the strategy has on an institution and its students. Data is also a strong communication tool used to explain the value of the strategy to internal and external stakeholders, partners, and funders on why they should invest additional resources in the institution. This session will discuss the data colleges are expected to track as part of WFSN, common challenges with data collection, and experiences of existing colleges using the strategy.

Financial Products and Services for Students

Financial issues and crises can derail students' ability to stay in college and complete their education. This session will explore the financial challenges students face while in college, introduce how behavioral economics approaches can inform solutions, and discuss how financial products and services can be embedded in the financial services strand of WFSN work in colleges.

Presenters: Ashvin Prakash, Consultant—Advisory Services, Center for Financial Services Innovation (CFSI); Sarah Griffen, WFSN Consultant

Hong Kong

Communications Session

Effective outreach to students can be a challenge for institutions. Each college must actively communicate to internal and external stakeholders the services they offer and the value add they have for students, the institution, and community. This session will help colleges begin to think about challenges and best practices when developing a communications plan.
